

Many college students struggle with managing their time effectively. Between classes, homework, part-time jobs, social events, and personal responsibilities, students often feel overwhelmed. This leads to procrastination, last-minute cramming, missed deadlines, and burnout. These can all be caused by a lack of structure, digital distractions, overcommitment, and mental overload.